

This is a peer-reviewed article without an English summary. It deals with the unreadable page 99v in Möðruvallabók that contains the Lay of Arinbjorn. Among the results presented are the following:

- 1) Some text can be read using infrared pictures that cannot be read by other available means.
- 2) A transcript of the poem in ÍB 169 4to is older and better than the currently used transcript in AM 146 fol.
- 3) An exact replica of part of the page (one verse) exists that was made around year 1800 and proves that the vellum was in much better condition at that time.
